The business plan is an undeniably critical component to get any company off the ground. It is key to guarantee funding, document your business model, outline your financial projections, and transform that pepit of a business idea into a reality. In a time when more than 50% of small businesses fail in their first year, having a clear, defined and well-thought business plan is a crucial first step for creating a business for long-term success. Business plans are a necessary tool for all entrepreneurs, business owners, business buyers, and also business school students. But what exactly is a business plan? In this post, we will explain what a business plan is, list the reasons why you need it and identify different types of business plan. What is a Business Plan? A business plan is a documented strategy for a business that highlights its goals and plans to achieve them. Business plans outline a company's go-to-market strategy, financial projections, market research, business purpose and mission. The business plan is also a leading tool used to protect investors and finance for a business. Business plan model [Download Now] Working on your business plan? Try using our business plan model. Pre-filled with the sections of a large business plan needs, the model will give aspiring entrepreneurs a feeling for what a business plan is, what it should be in it, and how it can be used to establish and grow a business from scratch. PurposeThe odds are, someone who designs a business plan will do it for one or more of the following reasons: 1. Investors finance operations. Since its content revolves around how businesses succeed, they break also, and turn a profit, a business plan is mainly used as a tool for the capital sourcing. This document is a way of showing prospective investors and/or loans as their capital will be put to work and how it will help a prosper business. All banks, investors and venture capital companies will want to see a business plan before delivering their money, and investors typically want a ROI of 20-25% from the capital they invest in a business. Therefore, these investors must know if – and when – they will make their money back (and then some). In addition, they will want to read the process and strategy for how the company will achieve those financial goals, which is where the context provided by the plans for sale, marketing and operations comes into play. 2. Documentation of a company's strategy and objectives. A business plan should not leave any inverted stone. Business plans can embrace dozens or even hundreds of pages, offering their designers the opportunity to explain what are the goals of a business and how the company will achieve them. To show potential investors who have faced every question and thought through every possible scenario, entrepreneurs should thoroughly explain their marketing, sales and operations strategies – from acquiring aposition for business to explain a tactical approach to marketing penetration. These explanations should lead to breaking a business even point supported by a forecast of sale and financial projections, with the writer of the business plan able to speak with why behind nothing outlined in the plan. 3. legitimize a corporate idea. Everyone has a great idea for a company – until they put pen to paper and realize that it is not exactly feasible. The business plan is a stimulating way of the entrepreneur to show that a business idea is really worth pursuing. As entrepreneurs document their go-to-market process, capital needs, and expected return on investments, entrepreneurs probably meet some hiccups that will make them guess their strategies and metrics – and this is exactly what the business plan is for. Make sure that the ducks of an entrepreneur are in line before bringing their business idea to the world and reassures plan readers that anyone who wrote the plan is serious about the idea, having put hours to think about the business idea, empying growth tactics and calculating financial projections. 4. Get an A in your business class. Speaking of personal experience, there is a possibility that you are here to get business plan ideas for your Business 101 class project. If this is the case, could we suggest you check this post on How to write a Business Plan – by providing a section guide on creating your plan? Types of business plans 1.Action Plan Probably the most common type of business plan, a startup business plan is used for brand new business ideas. This plan is used to take a business concept and lay the foundations for its success. The biggest challenge with the startup business plan is that it requires its writer to start completely from scratch. The startup business plans begin with an empty word document, and before they are finished, they need to reference existing industry data and explain unique business strategies and go-to-market plans. 2. Business Acquisition Plan Investors will still see a business plan to acquire funds to purchase an existing business in order to see how its new owner will manage the company. What will change and what will remain the same under new property, and why? In addition, the business plan should talk to what the current state of the business a-be-acquired is, and why it is for sale. For example, if someone is buying an inadequate business plan, the business plan should explain why the business was purchased and what the new owner will do to turn the business around, referring to previous business metrics, selling projections after acquisition, and a justification for those projections. 3. Business repositioning plan When a business wants to save itself, reposition its brand, or try something new, some CEOs or owners will want to develop a business repositioning plan. This plan should: Recognize the current state of society. State a vision forfuture of the company. explain why the business should (or must) be repositioned. highlights a process for how the company will adapt. companies planning a corporate reposition do so – proactively or retroactively – because of a change in market trends and customer needs. For example, pizza hut announced a new brand last year, as it sees the need to move from dine-in to delivery – a decision that derives from the observation of years of industrial and business trends and the recognition of the need to relocate for the future of its sector. 4. Business plan to build on a successful business venture with another location typically requires its business plan, as the project may require a new position, focus on a new target market, and demand for more capital. Fortunately, an expansion business plan allows its reference writers sales, revenues and successes from any previous position (s). However, as a reference like these points may be, it is important not to be too much reliance on them, since it is still a new activity that might succeed or fail for a myriad of reasons. Starting with your business plan at the end of the day, a business plan is simply an explanation of a business idea and why it will succeed. The more detail and thought you put in it, the more successful your plan – and the business that outlines – will be. if you need help to start your business plan, download the free business plan model of hbspotfill the sections to meet the concept of your business idea.
