Bravos mct washing machine manual

2 / 12Screeny/Shutterstock It happened to all of us. You are at the supermarket, pay in cash, and get your change back, just to quickly fill it in your pocket so as not to keep the rest of the line. Your washing machine is a little stronger than it should be and all those coins are going to take a bath in the washing machine. Those little metal pieces may seem harmless, but they can cause serious damage to your washing machine. "[Coins] can damage the fins on the exhaust pump if the filter passes it," says James Peters, Kenmore Laundry Product Manager. "Emptying pockets are the solution." They may also be stuck in an exhaust pipe and lock it so that water does not drain, or could also crush the glass of a front-load washing machine. Or worse, they could damage the drum and pierce the outer tank, which could cost hundreds and hundreds of dollars to repair. (We bet you didn't know it's totally OK to put these 16 things in the washing machine, though.) 3 / 12PANUPONG HARNKHAM/SHUTTERSTOCK You're about to exhaust the gas, but you're in a hurry (check these tips to get a better gas mixture). So, once you finish filling the tank, you quickly pull out the pump and - whoops, you pour gas on you. It happens. But don't make the mistake of throwing those pants in the washing machine. You might be eager to get rid of that strong smell, but the gasoline does not mix well with your washing machine. It could also lead to aor an explosion. Don't worry, according to The Spruce, you can get those stubborn stains by mixing sodium bicarbonate and a part of water and rubbing the dough into the stain. Another method is to wash them by hand "in a sink or bucket with hot water and detergent or soap for dishes and dry hanging", says Peters. (By the way, did you know that gas pumps are more rusty than gas station seats? Yes, bring your hand sanitizer.) 4 / 12Benjamin Haas/Shutterstock We know, it is much easier to throw your lingerie into the washing with the rest of your clothes. Unfortunately, this could be bad news for both your clothes and your washing machine. Those hooks and wires on and in your lingerie could stick to other clothes or even themselves, resulting in tears and tears. This is especially true for the underwired bras. They can also hook parts of the washing machine, which could end up damaging the inside of the machine. Instead, opt for hand washing your delicate or buying a lingerie bag to wash them in. (Here are other ways not to spoil clothes in the laundry.) 5 / 12Brian A Jackson/Shutterstock It is only human to be forgotten sometimes, although this means to forget the keys in your pocket when they pass through the washing. Well, like all those who have access without key or remote lockers/blockers know, water is not our friend. This could cause short circuit keys, which would lead to another conundrum. But this is not the worst. Just...coins, keys can scratch the inside of your machine and damage the drum, too. That, as mentioned before, can be a very expensive solution. According to Peters, "Emptying pockets are the solution." (While the keys are probably late for cleaning, the washing machine is definitely not the place to do so. Here's how you should really be cleaning the keys and these other things that you always forget about healthy.) 6 / 12Gladskih Tatiana/Shutterstock If you have a hairy friend, there is a good chance you can ensure for that fact that pet hair seems to appear anywhere. On the jacket? Check. On carpets? Check. Everything about your bed? Double check. And the worst part? All hair can clump together in the washing machine, which can inlay its exhaust pumps and attach to the sides of the washing cylinder, William Bittner, vice president of North American sales at Speed Queen, a company that makes both commercial and residential washers, said Consumer Reports. (You will definitely take note of these smart ways to keep home products difficult clean.) 8 / 12Wayhome Studio/Shutterstock While sneakers are usually A-OK to run through the washing, trying to wash running shoes can end up being a rather expensive mistake, especially if they end up reducing. If you have to wash your running shoes and their tag says they are safe from the machine, Livestrong suggests to remove the suns and put each shoe in a separate pillowcase. Then, wash your shoes with bath towels to act as pillows.are some tips to keep your shoes smelling fresh.) 9 / 12Africa Studios/Shutterstock Small clothes, like socks for children, can also stay stuck in places not so easy to reach. According to HGTV, these small objects can make their way into the mouths and tubes of your washing machine. No one wants to face a flood—instead, wash those small objects in a washable mesh bag to make sure nothing escapes. 10 / 12Pavelstock/ShutterstockYour clothes may be waterproof, but this does not mean they are compatible with your washing machine. "Having something like a raincoat or a mattress cover can create a condition in which the material traps water over time as a water ball that fills," says Adkisson. "Then, if (the water balloon) suddenly "breaks" during the rotation cycle, sends all that mass to other spaces, creating a serious imbalance that can lead to the mysterious "exploring" washing machine. 11 / 12S-TS/Shutterstock Plus detergent, the cleaner the laundry, right? Not exactly. "Using too much detergent can damage your washing machine," says Adkisson. "Diverging residues can build in the washing machine – and clothes – isolating unpleasant odors in the machine, clothes that are not completely rinsed, and over time, machine components can fail." (Here are some narrative signs that you are using too detergent.) 12 / 12Iamno/Shutterstock It might seem easier to fill as you can in your washing machine (especially if you have to pay forbut you are not really doing yourself (or your wallet) some favors. When the washing machine is stuffed to the bathroom, there is no room for the laundry to move and actually get washed. Not to mention, the overlap could damage the suspension and bearings of your washing machine. In fact, according to Adkisson, "Overloading is one of the main causes of washer and dryer problems that Sears Home Services technicians meet." Fortunately, we have an easy guide to how to solve both the washing machine and the dryer.
