PTI | Updated on: 06 Mar 2014, 12:09:08 PM New Delhi: Renowned author Bibhutibhushan Bandopadhyay’s classic adventure book in Bengali “Chander Pahar”, which paints a vivid portrait of Africa, is now available in the graphic novel format. Titled “Moon Mountain”, the novel published by Penguin Books India, has its script written by Saurav Mohapatra with illustrations by Sayan Mukherjee. Considered one of the greatest adventure novels in Bengali literature, “Moon Mountain” is a powerful tale of wanderlust and adventure and giving wings to one’s dreams. It is the tale of Shankar Roy Chowdhury and his friend Diego Alvarez, a middle-aged Portuguese explorer, as they make their way through the rugged wilderness of pre-World War I Africa in 1909-1910 and encounter wild beasts, lost tribes, labyrinthine trails, raging volcanoes, and mythical monsters that seem all too real, while in search of the fabled diamond mines of Richtersveld, the mountain of the moon. The graphic novel edition with beautiful and evocative illustrations is a treat for comic book enthusiasts. It brings Bandopadhyay’s vivid descriptions of the vast continent to life, while keeping the essence of the original story untouched. Mohapatra says he “lived and breathed” the book for a while, marvelling at the details that Bandopadhyay had infused into the narrative. “I had the impression that the author must have travelled the length and breadth of Africa, and actually lived the tale he so wonderfully told,” the dialogue writer says. “Bandopadhyay had never travelled to Africa. He culled the details about Africa its history, geography and biology from his extensive readings at the Calcutta Library. Imagine that, without Wikipedia, Google and such tools, he crafted a narrative so rich and true about a place he’d never been to, using just research diligence and a healthy dollop of imagination. “He was one of us a reader, a dreamer,” the California-based Mohapatra says. A movie based on the book was also released last December. Directed by Kamaleshwar Mukherjee, the film was shot on various locations across Africa like the Kruger National Park, Kalahari Desert and jungles of Mpumalanga and is reportedly one of the most expensive movies ever made in Bengali film industry. Bandopadhyay wrote novels, short stories, travelogues, and detailed diaries, all in Bengali. His first novel, “Pather Panchali,” was recognised as a landmark in Bengali fiction, and was adapted into an award-winning film by Satyajit Ray. Digital Editor Title: Mountain of the MoonTranslated from Bengali by Jayanta SenguptaPublished by Rupa Faced with the prospect of having to eke out a living as a jute mill clerk in his impoverished village for the rest of his life, Shankar Ray Choudhuri, having just come of age, bids farewell to his family and beloved Bengal to work as a railway construction camp storekeeper in Pre-World War I Uganda and, later, as a station master. One day, after Shankar saves the life of Portuguese explorer and gold prospector Diego Alvarez, the latter informs him of a quest he had once undertook for el dorado-like diamond mines in the treacherous Richtersveld Mountains. The love of adventure and the lure of riches fuel a spirited odyssey where the two risk life and limb, traversing hitherto unexplored dense forests, verdant grasslands and arid plains of the Dark Continent. Up against threats as colourful and varied as lurking snakes, prowling lions, ferocious tribals, poisonous roots, the fury of an active volcano and a seemingly supernatural horror that drik Alvarez’s former partner in, the seasoned outdoorsman and Shankar, displaying alacrity through thick and thin, stalk their dream with grit and single-mindedness. The Mountain of the Moon, a translation of Bibhutibhushan Bandyopadhyay’s (renowned for his novel Pather Panchali) Chander Pahar written in the 1930s, is a survivalist adventure story with sprinklings of the Bildungsroman and a cleverly insinuated horror element (the unspeakable Buniyip, the dreadful three-toed guardian of the elusive diamond cache). With an easy-going simplicity (to the point of terseness for some) in a narrative that spans across several minute chapters, Jayanta Sengupta’s translation, not employing words that have you scurrying off for the dictionary, indicates the copious amount of geographical research undertaken and a possible proclivity for the fiction of Rider Haggard (among others) on the part of Bandyopadhyay. Segupta, rightly, refrains from upgrading the names of places in the text (Zimbabwe is Rhodesia, Harare is Salisbury), which adds a quaintness to the story. If it’s the pairing of an Indian and European together in a still alien climate that piques the interest of experts who read into colonial literature, they will be pleasantly surprised to learn that it’s the universal qualities in Alvarez such as valour and enterprise that Shankar is constantly fawning over, and not ‘whiteness’ or obscure ideals of enlightenment. The Mountain of the Moon, being ever so quaint and gripping, would be better remembered and endeared by readers (the assumption here is that they are Bengali) who encountered it in their childhood, perhaps buried away in the adventure section of their dusty school library. Still, the adventures of Shankar who, armed with erroneous maps and supplies of baboon ham and coffee, seeks to make his mark in an untamed land make for an interesting read. Paragraph on The Adventurous Story You Read Recently An Adventurous Story The Mountain of Moon (Chander Pahar)The Adventurous Story I Read Recently Recently I read an adventurous story full of thrill and excitement. It was Bibhutibhushan Bandopadhyay’s Chander Pahar (The Mountain of the Moon, 1937) that deserves to be regarded as the full fledged popular adventure novel in Bengali. It tells of the exploits of a Bengali youth Shankar Roy Chaudhary who undertook the most hazardous and venturesome journey to reach the Chander Pahar (The Mountain of the Moon) in Richtersveld, Africa in search of precious yellow diamond caves supposed to be guarded by a mythical monster Buniyip. In his pursuit, Shankar was accompanied by Diego Alvarez, a middle-aged Portuguese explorer. So, lured by the prospect of precious yellow diamond, Shankar and Alvarez ventured again. In course of their journey, they had to face with many hardships like special tribal people, a raging volcano and Buniyip who killed Alvarez. But in a final duel with Shankar, Buniyip died and accidentally Shankar found the diamond mines. He collected some yellow diamond taking them as normal stones. Demoralised, Shankar tried to return to civilisation and was lost in the desert of Kalahari. He was fortunately rescued by a survey team. The whole story is filled with thrill and excitement. The author also provided a nice pictorial description of the setting of the story. Each page of the book is transformed from wonder to wonder. Inspired by Bibhuti Bhushan Bandyopadhyay’s Bengali adventure novel ‘Chander Pahar’ set in 1909 Africa, mountaineer-adventurer Anindya Mukherjee set out in 2015 in an attempt to retrace the footsteps of the classic novel’s protagonist ‘Shankar’. In this book the author offers a peek behind the curtains into some of the real history, geopolitics and actual lore that influenced Bibhuti Bhushan’s own writing, and how each piece falls into the greater puzzle-scheme of early 20th-century Africa.
