Best website to movies on phone

Many websites, including How-to Geek, display a mobile version for users that are browsing the site on their phone. This is done to reduce bandwidth and look better on a smaller screen and resolution, but sometimes you really just want the full desktop version of a website. Read on to find out how to view the desktop version of any website on your phone. There are plenty of reasons why you might want to use the full desktop version of a website on your mobile device. Some websites disable certain features from their mobile version that they may deem unnecessary or bandwidth-intensive. Other times it can just be a pain to navigate a mobile website when the data you need is displayed much more easily on the desktop version. There are a lot of websites that don't offer us a choice in how we view their site, so we have to take matters into our own hands. Knowing how to do this is also especially useful when you're on a Wi-Fi network, in which case the mobile version of a website won't really load any faster than the desktop version anyway. Disabling the Mobile Version of a Website on iPhone or iPad Since iOS 9, you can very easily switch to the desktop version of a website — there are two ways to do it. The first is to use the Share (the arrow) menu, and then choose Request Desktop Site. The second way is to long-press on the reload button and choose Request Desktop Site from the menu. Pretty simple, really. Disabling the Mobile Version of a Website on Android Google makes it much simpler and includes an option to enable desktop view in the default Chrome browser. Just click on the settings menu in the upper right corner and then check "Request desktop site." There are a lot of Android apps on Google Play that also carry this functionality, but downloading them just for this ability would be pointless since the default browser is able to do it. The only drawback to using the default browser on Android is that there isn't a way to permanently enable desktop view. If you decide that, by default, you'd like to view every website in desktop view, you'll need a third party app. Disabling the Mobile Version of a Website on Windows You can disable the mobile version of a website with Window's default browser, Internet Explorer. To configure this setting, open Internet Explorer > More > Settings > Website preference. Photo courtesy of windowsphone.com. The Simplest Method. Sometimes Of course, the easiest way to get to the desktop version of a website is by selecting the desktop view link on the page itself — although most pages don't have one. Not every website has this option, so you can use the methods in this article as a quick workaround. Just remember that websites force you into mobile view to maximize your experience on their website, reduce your load time, and save you cellular data. Many people connected to the Internet only have a smartphone, with no personal computer. While some libraries and internet cafés offer free PC access, it's easier when you have access to the tools you need at any time. If you're looking to start a website, the services we're going to talk about here have fully functional mobile web apps that allow you to build, publish, and edit your site completely from your phone. The good part about doing it all online is that your work is saved with the service you use, so if you need to make more detailed changes at a public computer you can log into your account and continue working. GoDaddy GoDaddy's website builder works straight from their website. They have many themes available—which you are free to edit every part of—and have previews for the mobile and desktop versions of the site. Don't expect complete customization or an exceptional mobile experience, but it's fairly easy to make your site look how you want with some tweaking. You can edit each element to change the style, add new sections to each page, and set up multiple pages with a menubar at the top. They even have a fairly basic blog solution for easily updating content, which can be put on a separate page. WordPress WordPress is the king of online blogs, perfect for sites that need regularly updated content, and they also have a mobile editor. The default theme is basic and clean but can be customized or replaced with any other WordPress theme. Managing pages is easy, and the post editor is pretty featured for a mobile app. Publishing your site is easy, too; we had a basic blog set up and running in less than ten minutes. They offer basic free hosting and a free .wordpress.com domain. The free site will be WordPress branded. Paying for a plan removes that branding and gets you a premium domain. Weebly Weebly's mobile editor uses a native app that you can download from the App or Google Play Store, meaning you can edit your website while you're offline and then publish the changes when you get back online. They focus on eCommerce, and are free for basic sites, but require you to pay monthly if you want to sell products on your website.
