Clorox clean up material safety data sheet

Fabric expert Tricia Rose of Rough Linen shares her laundry tips for keeping sheets fresh. Keeping sheets fresh is no easy feat. No matter how frequently (or, let's be honest—in frequently) you wash them, that fresh-out-of-the-dryer feeling tends to fade after the first few sleeps in-between the sheets. General laundry rules exist for just about every other piece of fabric in your home—sports bras and jeans included—but there seems to be a common thread of confusion when it comes to washing sheets. Just how often should they really be cleaned? We looked to Tricia Rose, founder of textile company Rough Linen, for answers. Related: Why You Should Only Ever Buy White Bath Towels According to Rose, the frequency at which you should wash your sheets boils down to the season and your nightly habits. "Your sweat level, what you wear to bed, and whether or not you snack in bed all affect how quickly your bedding gets sullied," Rose says. "A woman sleeping in pajamas during a crisp spring is different from a sporty teenager who sleeps in boxers during a hot summer." Another factor to consider: how many people are sleeping in said bed every night. "If you share a bed, it gets twice the wear," Rose says. As a general rule of thumb, Rose advises weekly washings in order to keep your sheets looking and smelling as fresh as possible. "Once a week is standard," she says. "A lot of it is left to personal preference, but as soon as your sheets stop feeling fresh is the best time for you to wash them." Related: How to Care for Bedsheets It's crucial to consider the fabric you're sleeping on too, since cotton sheets vary in care compared to those made from linen. Linen requires less frequent washing than cotton does because the durable fabric repels dirt and can be cleaned easily with a shake out or a simple brush of the material with your hand. It turns out your sheets aren't the only bedding component that needs regular TLC. Rose advises on regular, weekly washings for pillowcases as well. As for duvet covers, Rose suggests easing up on habitual washes since a duvet floats over your body and gets far less wear than sheets do (and can be a real hassle to put back on). "Duvets take some effort to change, so less frequent washing saves yourself from that nuisance," she says. This story originally appeared on RealSimple.com. Getty Images The smell of freshly-baked cookies coming out of the oven never fails to make us smile. While we'd like to bake these scrumptious sweets more often, there's one thing stopping us: The looming feeling that there's a difficult clean-up in our future. Well, that's all about to change because we just found a cleaning tip that's guaranteed to leave your rusty, old baking sheets looking new again. According to PureWow, you just need three things that you most likely already have in your kitchen. Here's the full tutorial: 1. Sprinkle baking soda onto the baking sheet 2. Apply a layer of hydrogen peroxide 3. Add more baking soda on top 4. Let your mixture sit for up to two hours 5. Wipe it away using a coarse sponge or rag If you're unsure of how this mixture will effect your cookware, we recommend testing it out on a small spot on the back of the sheet. According to blogger Jillee of One Good Thing, who calls this method her "Miracle Cleaner," the key to getting the best results is time. She left the cleaner on her baking sheet while she went out for breakfast. "When we got home I rubbed a little of the cleaner off and was actually quite astonished to see MOST of the gunk came right off," she wrote on her blog. "Minimal rubbing with my fingers was required." And if that doesn't convince you, we'll just let her results speak for themselves: Want to try out this cleaning trick? The use of protective gloves and safety eyewear is recommended. The MSDS for each Fabuloso product indicates that ingesting large quantities is potentially harmful, notes Colgate-Palmolive Company. The MSDS for Fabuloso all-purpose liquid cleaner warns that overexposure may cause a respiratory tract infection. If overexposure occurs, the MSDS instructs the victim to move to a fresh air environment and seek medical attention if the symptoms persist. The MSDS for Fabuloso lavender does not contain an inhalation warning. Each MSDS also contains warnings about carcinogens and other potentially hazardous components contained in the products. Potentially hazardous components of Fabuloso cleaners include sodium dodecyl benzene sulfonate, propylene glycol propyl ether, sulfuric acid and ethanol, advises Colgate-Palmolive Company. Relative to stability and reactivity, each MSDS advises consumers to avoid contact with acids and strong oxidizing agents. Thermal decomposition may produce toxic fumes. Each MSDS also advises consumers to dispose of the cleaner in accordance with federal, state and local laws. Consumers should not dispose of the cleaner in sewers, in waterways or on the ground, instructs Colgate-Palmolive Company. material safety data sheet clorox clean up cleaner with bleach
